

“How to Write a Killer Joint Venture Proposal That Will Have Them Begging to do Business With You...”

Overview: Discover some of the highly effective persuasion techniques that will turn your joint venture proposals into profit-pulling partnerships, time and time again...

Writing a joint venture proposal is really just a fancy way of saying to your potential partner, “Hey, let’s do a deal.”

In fact, I've had far more success with brief, to-the-point proposals than I ever have with a stereotypical ten-page document packed full of corporate jargon.

The truth of the matter is that regardless of who your potential partner may be - whether they're an ezine publisher, a competing business owner or even if they're the CEO of a Fortune 500 company - they're all going to be asking themselves the same question when they receive your proposal:

“What's in this for me?”

More specifically, they'll be wondering how exactly you might be able to benefit them and their company.

Therefore, the most crucial component of your proposal is obviously going to be explaining “what's in it for them”. Now, before I get into more details about this, it is important to note that you must have something of great value to offer your potential partner.

Furthermore, it is absolutely crucial that your offer is laser-targeted, relevant and highly beneficial to their clients - as well as very lucrative for your potential partner. It's also very important to research your potential partner (and their company) in order to see what they would most likely be looking for - and it's not always more money, believe it or not....

With this in mind, let's take a look at how to write your proposal so that it pushes your partner's “buttons” - to the point where they'd have to be insane to turn down your offer...

7 Time-Tested (Yet Little-Known) Tactics That Will Transform Your Proposals into Obscenely Profitable JV Partnerships, Time and Time Again...

The following tactics are likely some of the most overlooked - yet crucial - proposal-writing strategies that have continually proven themselves, over and over again.

98% of people trying to put together joint ventures simply do NOT take the time to use them effectively - including your competition (unless they're reading this...) That's why most JV proposals end up in "file thirteen".

Read on to discover how to write an absolutely irresistable JV proposal...

1. What is your potential partner looking for specifically? Find this out by talking to them, reading their mission statement and researching them - as well as how they make decisions. This will reveal the "button" that you'll need to press as you describe the benefits of the partnership (ie. more profits, something new to offer their clients, giving their business a new edge on competition, etc.)

2. Make an offer they can't refuse. Again, this will also take some research, but within reason, you should bend over backwards to accommodate your potential partner and make it as profitable for them as possible. Remember that the clients you acquire from a joint venture will purchase from you again and again - and it's usually the "backend profits" after the JV where the real money gets made...

3. Make it as easy as possible for them to say "yes". People in general are obnoxiously lazy. Many of my proposals have been rejected simply because it either seemed too complicated - or it sounded like too much work to them, regardless of how lucrative it was. Simplify your proposal, and if necessary, take on the majority of the workload - remember that you're sitting on a goldmine!

4. Show them the money. Don't be vague when it comes to potential earnings. Logically explain to your prospect how much they could reasonably earn from the partnership. It is very important that you do not simply make an "educated guess" - base your predictions entirely on your current marketing stats, sales conversion rates and other real data. This is likely the most overlooked - yet crucial - part of any given JV proposal.

5. Be personal. A "canned" or impersonal proposal likely won't even make it more than ten seconds before getting tossed in the garbage. Relate to your prospect and emphasize their values by validating their interests, goals and passions. Also, if you want to really make an impact, send your proposal as a hard copy via FedEx. Email is simply too easy to ignore, erase or forget about.

6. Add a real sense of urgency. You want to subtly hint to your potential partner that you won't wait long to hear back from them - which is true, because if they say "no", you'll have to find someone else anyway. Word this in such a way that it compels them to action either way - but don't be overbearing, deceptive or unrealistic.

7. And most importantly, build rapport with your prospect. You must understand that the majority of business people - especially those that are very successful - would much rather work with someone that they know, like and trust than a complete stranger. In fact, it's crucial that you do this before you even send them a proposal...

Well, there you go.

You have just been taught the art of writing an incredibly powerful JV proposal that will easily persuade others to do business with you - and you'll have a serious advantage over your competition because of it...

But knowledge is meaningless unless you act on it.

So apply these tactics to your own business development strategy - today - and watch your response rates (and your profits) skyrocket!

- Chris Rempel, JV-Web.com

Find a Joint Venture Partner TODAY >>

Featured Free Download from JV-Web.com:

" How to EASILY Create JV Partnerships - even if your Potential Partner has NO idea what a Joint Venture is! "

- Choosing the RIGHT Partner for Your Business
- How to Approach Potential Partners
- Sample Proposal Letters that Worked - and Why
- Setting up the Deal
- The Single MOST Crucial Part of Convincing Others to do Business with You
- Strategies for Maximizing Your Profits (and your Partner's)

Click to Download Free from JV-Web.com >>